Abstract
Trade Representation in Roman Art

Khalid Qasim M. Tarawneh

Mu'tah University,2008

This study aims at tracking the phenomenon of trade characterization in Roman art. The study has adopted a theoretical and analytical approach. Theoretically, Roman trade, its stages of expansion and significance as well as international trade relationships have been outlined. Also, Roman efforts to facilitate trade activities were discussed.

The analytical part of the study focuses on the demonstration, investigation and extrapolation of scenes in the Roman artistic works that represent trade. These activities include selling, purchasing and transportation of goods as well as processes of agricultural and industrial production.

In order to comprehend more completely the importance of trade in the Roman world, the geographic distribution of artistic works with trade manifestations have been studied and compared to Greek examples. This resulted in a broad understanding of the representation of trade in works of art in the Roman world that had a wide geographic distribution and were not restricted to a certain genre of art.
